Note to Authors

The U.S. Copyright Act of 1976 (P.L. 94-553) makes it necessary to obtain permission from authors to print and reprint their articles in publications of the Cotton Foundation. Permission to print and reprint does not constitute transfer of copyright. Furthermore, since the article named above is not copyrighted by the Cotton Foundation, the author(s) also retain(s) the authority and the responsibility to decide on and respond to requests for further use of the article by other persons or organizations. In granting printing and reprinting rights to the publisher, the corresponding author is requested to obtain the signatures of all co-authors of the article. After each author has signed this form, the signed copy must be returned to the corresponding editor before the article can be published. The publisher shall not be held liable for editorial and printing errors and errors in technical content of the article.

While giving the publisher the right to print, the author(s) agree(s) that the article has not been published heretofore and shall not be released to any other publisher until the article is published by the Cotton Foundation.

Some materials are not protected by the copyright law and are therefore public property. All works prepared by officers or employees of the U.S. Government as part of their official duties are in the public domain and may be used without further permission. If you are a U.S. Government employee, simply check the box below and sign your names(s) to indicate that the work was done on government time.

- Permission to print and reprint is hereby granted by the undersigned author(s) to the Cotton Foundation.
 Work prepared by officer or employee of the U.S. Government on government time.

Co-authors. If a co-author is a non-U.S. Government employee and another co-author is a U.S. Government employee, each author shall excuse that part of the form which applies to him/her.
